Why study public affairs and administration?

The School of Public Affairs and Administration develops skilled leaders, innovators and problem solvers who are ready to confront pressing social and economic challenges at the local, state and national levels. Our graduates become public management practitioners who exemplify a deep commitment to ethical and professional public service administration within a wide variety of public and nonprofit sector professions.

The School of Public Affairs and Administration

The School of Public Affairs and Administration is ranked #1 among graduate schools in city management and urban policy (since 1998), and the School is ranked among public universities as #3 in public management administration, #8 in environmental policy and management, and #10 in public affairs according to the U.S. News and World Report (2016).

Founded in 1948, the masters in public administration (MPA) intern-option program prepares students to assume management and leadership roles in local government. The School also provides a career-option program for working professionals who want to earn their MPA without a career interruption.

While our School is most well-known for its MPA, the School also offers comprehensive programs at the bachelor's and doctoral levels. The bachelor's courses are taught at the Edwards Campus and include majors in 1) public administration and 2) law and society (proposed to begin Fall 2016). Our doctoral degree is designed primarily for students anticipating careers in research and teaching.

The Public Management Center (PMC), which is housed within the School, offers educational programs to meet the leadership training needs for public service professionals. The PMC is the only agency in the state of Kansas that can teach the nationally-accredited Kansas Certified Public Manager® program.

Mission

The mission of the School of Public Affairs & Administration of the University of Kansas is to educate exceptional public professionals and generate thought leadership that provides solutions to the most pressing global and community challenges by advancing the public good, democratic values, and ethical public management practices.

Undergraduate Programs

A bachelor's degree in public administration provides undergraduate students with the knowledge and skills needed for planning, implementing and evaluating public programs. As students learn to think critically and analytically about public policy, they will better understand the dynamics in their own communities and how to be more effective citizens and public officials.

Graduates of the program will be ready to work in settings like local and state government, nonprofit organizations and private sector businesses.

Graduate Programs

The School offers an M.P.A. degree and a Ph.D. degree. The M.P.A. program offers two tracks.

- The intern-option M.P.A. program is designed for students who have little or no public administration experience and are willing to commit to one year of full-time study and a second year in a full-time internship to prepare themselves for careers in city or county management.
- The career-option M.P.A. program is designed for working professionals seeking to strengthen their leadership skills for careers in public service professions or advance in their current profession without a career interruption.
- The doctoral program is designed primarily for students anticipating careers in research and teaching.
